“A new group urging Republicans to embrace a revenue-neutral carbon tax coupled with repeal of emissions regulations is looking to pump funds into new research projects.

“The Alliance for Market Solutions, led by a former member of President Trump’s transition team, Alex Flint, is offering a series of grants between $10,000 and $100,000 for research into the intersection of tax, regulatory, energy and environmental policy ...

“Alex Brill, a research fellow at the American Enterprise Institute who is directing AMS’s research, said while there is good evidence a price on carbon could negate the need for regulation, there is also a need for further study.

“‘AMS is fact-based and scholarly in its research,’ he told E&E News. ‘The idea is to open the door and invite researchers wherever they may be who have something to contribute.’ ...

“‘We’re less interested in a theoretical model about how a carbon tax would impact a hypothetical economy,’ Brill said. ‘Our mission is more practical.’ ...

“The project proposals are due Oct. 1.”
